Resembling CarCharging's own business strategy, according to the July 21, 2016 fact sheet issued by The White House Office of the Press Secretary, the intention is to "ensure that electric vehicle drivers have access to charging stations at home, at work, and on the road".

The fact sheet included, but was not limited to, the following actions:

- Releasing up to $4.5 billion in loan guarantees and inviting applications to support the deployment of commercial EV charging facilities
- Launching the Fixing America's Surface Transportation (FAST) Act process to identify and develop corridors for zero emission and alternative fuel vehicles, which will include a network of EV fast charging stations

"Given CarCharging's commitment to expanding EV charging infrastructure throughout the United States and supporting the acceleration of EV adoption, we fully support the Obama Administration's plan to reduce our country's dependence on oil and increase access to alternative fuels," said Mike Calise, CarCharging's Chief Executive Officer. "Combined with our current EV charging solutions for the home, work, and public locations, as well as our efforts and intentions to expand our EV charging services and locations across the United States, we believe that the new action plan will assist in providing the necessary commitment and financing to deploy EV charging infrastructure on a commercial-scale."

CarCharging intends to collaborate with the Obama Administration, the Departments of Energy, Transportation, Defense, and Environmental Protection Agency, as well as EV industry stakeholders to help successfully implement the new action plan and various programs involved.
